What other issues experienced by students in South Africa can influence these responsibilities?

I agree with the author of the essay because he talks about the responsibilities of students and teachers in the school. The basics of the subject matter for our living and learning experience of our work. We are expected to know the fundamentals of grammar, basic mathematics, personal conduct, and study habits. Teachers help to develop your intellect and talk about your future job. In high school we need to learn these things in the school system and graduate from a first world nation should be able to construct a grammatically correct sentence or paragraph.

Online study does not affect these responsibilities just because it can help many students to know your post-secondary like that to present all relevant course information in a clear manner, to ensure that the relevant material is covered within the time allotted for the class. To make all reading material available or to indicate where it is available, such as the library or bookstore, and to ensure there is enough for every student to have reasonable and fair access. To have office hours during which students can ask for help, clarification, etc. To be respectful to students asking questions and not insult, put-down, mock, or otherwise belittle a student for not understanding. To give students all the information necessary to succeed.

Other issues experienced by students in South Africa can influence these responsibilities. Students without scholarships must support themselves without support and without financial aid, other than symbolic. It is difficult in these conditions to study without the support of his family. Students in French-speaking Africa face many difficulties, despite a marked improvement in schooling conditions in primary and secondary education. It is real the university is not easy, but it is a challenge. We must work hard for a living and get our higher certificate or diploma.
